Business Machine

Under the direction of Maddison Glorio, Wolf Creek Golf Club has become a prime example of a lean business. By cutting down expenses and payroll, Glorio has allowed Wolf Creek to flourish, still maintaining a 5-star rating on Facebook reviews, and 4.4 average on Google. Most reviews give credit to superintendent Mark Abrams who has done a remarkable job keeping the course in great shape and improving on the conditions of the grounds.

Quail Crossing Golf Club

Quail Crossing Golf Club is in constant motion. Between new tournaments, course improvements, and infallible leadership, Quail Crossing is setting themselves up for a huge year in 2017. While still slightly behind in their 2016 plan, the improved conditions have already been noticed by members.

Superintendent Alan Sowers has improved course conditions beyond expectation and continues working with his grounds team to work on the daily maintenance of the landscape. In 2017, we hope to see Alan working to bring the course conditions to an even higher standard and building the reputation for Quail back up in local markets.

Laura Daywalt and her assistant general manager Rachel Smith, have also worked to produce fantastic growth. With new tournaments and almost weekly events, the management team has increased local participation through creative and targeted events designed to meet the needs of Southern Indiana golfers.
